Downtown is reeling this week with film trailers, wardrobe and actors as they film the fourth season of APTN's Blackstone.

An Oilers game played while actors filmed a scene at the now closed Shade105 nightclub on 105 Street during Wednesday afternoon's filming of a show that has evolved over the last few years, according to film crew.

"I really think season four will be the best season yet. There's multi-layered characters in Blackstone," said Jesse Szymanski, producer.

The show (<http://www.blackstonetheseries.com/>) is described as a "raw, powerful, and addictive series continues to explore the universal themes of power, corruption and family as seen through the lives of the Blackstone First Nation community."

The show was recently received four Canadian Screen Award nominations.

The film crew will make their way to the Edmonton Remand Centre later in their filming as they change locations for the show's narrative. Filming will continue until May, with season four to air this fall.
